

Overview of EU geographical indications (GI) protected with treatments

Australia will protect all 396 of the EU's requested GIs, most of which were not found to be used by Australian producers and therefore their protection is unlikely to have any significant commercial impact in Australia. Certain terms identified as commercially valuable to Australian producers will be protected with negotiated flexibilities as outlined below.

Continued use

Australian producers can continue to use certain terms, provided such use is not misleading.

Key examples include:

Relevant term	Protected EU GI	Product
Parmesan	Parmigiano Reggiano	Cheeses
Prosecco (domestic, as a plant variety)	Prosecco	Wines
Kransky	Kranjska klobasa	Meat products

Grandfathering (11 terms)

'Prior users' can continue to label their products with the below relevant terms. To be a 'prior user', they must be able to prove they used the term continuously and in good faith for at least five years before entry into force.

Relevant term	Protected EU GI	Product
Bavarian	Bayerisches Bier	Beer
Feta	Feta	Cheeses
Finocchiona	Finocchiona	Meat products
Grain jenever	Genièvre de grains / Graanjenever / Graanjenever	Spirits

Prosecco (export)	Prosecco	Wines	10 years

DISCLAIMER: The below of geographical indications (GIs) is for reference only and is without prejudice to the final outcome of the A-EU FTA. The official text of the agreement, including the annexes containing the EU GIs to be protected, will be published in due course.

For greater clarity, the EU has confirmed examples of where the protection would not extend to the use of parts of EU GI names. This is identified in the list below by text that has been underlined. For example, for the EU GI "Camembert de Normandie", protection is not sought for the name "camembert" when used by itself.
